

Agent Tempest Geryon thought she'd survived gods,
monsters, and politics.

She was wrong.

A fire-breathing drakon is tearing through New York City, burning buildings, inciting panic, and pushing a city already on edge into chaos. With riots erupting, curfews enforced, and the public turning against her kind, Tempest is racing against time to stop a threat no one can contain.

Every lead points somewhere she doesn't want to look.

Home.

As the heir to Oceanus, Tempest is being forced into a destiny she refuses to accept—training for a crown she never wanted, navigating a royal court filled with secrets, and facing pressure to choose a future that isn't her own.

But when the prime suspect in the city's destruction becomes Typhon—a monstrous storm-giant, her former lover, and the most dangerous being she's ever trusted—everything changes.

Typhon swears he's innocent.
The evidence says otherwise.
And the truth may destroy them both.

As Tempest digs deeper, she uncovers a conspiracy fueled by obsession, power, and a creature who will burn the world to claim what she believes is hers.

Caught between duty and desire, past and future, Tempest must decide who to trust before New York goes up in flames. Because some monsters don't just destroy cities...

They destroy hearts.